Alex spent the cruel winter of 1916 in the trenches at Fromelles, Deville Wood, Montauban, and Fricourt and like many of his fellow solders suffered from Trench Foot and ailments related to standing and sleeping in freezing water.

At Polygon Wood

"We went over the top at 5.45am and reached our objective at 7.30am".

While preparing for the German counter attack digging in, Alex received a gunshot wound to the left-hand side of his chest.

"I crawled back to where engineers were digging a trench. They took everything off me, bandaged me up and put a towel over my shoulder and carried me to an old Fritzies block house. There were about five of us in it. We stayed that day and night. The stretcher bearer came and got us next morning. I got down to the CES 3 o'clock that evening and went straight into the operating table and had the bullet and two of my ribs taken out just over my heart. It was a ricker shaped bullet that went in under my left arm, through 2 ribs and just missed my heart. The Doctor said it was a very lucky hit."

WIA (GSW L chest & arm) at Polygon Wood on 27th Sep 1917
 Admitted 3rd Fld Amb (SW chest, side & arm) on 27th Sep 1917
